

RAISULLI'S BAND ASSAULT WOMEN

Mrs. Varley, Wife of Kidnaped Englishman, Describes Capture of Perdicaris by Bandits.

STRUGGLED FOR FREEDOM.

All Demands of Rebel Chief Will Have to Be Met Before He Agrees to Release—Marines Ready.

SPECIAL BY CABLE TO THE ST. LOUIS REPUBLIC AND THE NEW YORK HERALD. London, June 4.—(Copyright, 1904.)—The Daily Mail's Tanager correspondent, telegraphing on Friday, says:

"The Sheriffs of Wazan and Anghere will try to use their influence with Raisuli for the release of Perdicaris and Varley. The report of the possible landing of foreign marines is not yet confirmed, but a force is in readiness. It is felt here that practically all Raisuli's demands will have to be granted if the captives are to be released."

"Mrs. Cromwell Varley, wife of one of the captured men, has written a graphic account of the descent upon the Perdicaris villa by Raisuli's band in a letter written to Mrs. Fleetwood Varley at Maidenhead, dated May 13. She says: 'We only went up to Adula Villa, five miles from Tanager, on Monday afternoon. On Wednesday we were all walking about the grounds till 5 p. m. after dinner we had been sitting in the drawing-room about ten minutes when we heard a great noise of screaming and shouting. A man came flying in to say 'They are killing Juan, Uncle and Crom!' and then rushed out."

"We followed, and found a small kitchen full of men. I saw Uncle and 'Crom' outside, apparently sitting under a number of Moors, by whom they were surrounded. No sooner did we appear than they raised their rifles and fired and threw her down three steep steps leading into the kitchen tank on her face on the tiled floor, and as she lay there, while they pointed guns at the heads of mother and the girls."

"Then Hussein's son, Sellanito, and that big Selam of the stables rushed forward and proceeded to beat us with their hands and feet. We were all beaten and lay on the ground. So we all retired to mother's room, however, went downstairs and telephoned to central that the house was surrounded by robbers, and for God's sake to send help immediately."

QUIET UNDER FEAR OF DEATH. "Sellanito came and implored us not to telephone, but to keep quiet as if the soldiers came to our help the rebels would immediately proceed to kill us all, including the Moorish servants."

"Presently he came, asking for Uncle's boots and overcoat. He could tell us nothing. In a few minutes, finding all very quiet, we went down to reconnoiter and found every one dead but Selam of the stables, Abbas and Mohammed, the soldier, who told us that the Moors had carried Uncle and 'Crom' off and all the best horses. We then went again to the telephone for help, but as we were doing so the wire was cut."

"I wrote a letter to Sir Arthur, the British Minister, and another to Mr. Gummere, the United States Consul, then, and asking for help, and sent it by a boy, who got through all right, and in two long, weary hours after all had happened, Mr. Gummere and Mr. Ewart, an English attaché, arrived with soldiers, and soon after Colonel Bristow and several others, who remained all night, and a large guard of soldiers."

"As soon as it was light the whole party returned to Mr. Perdicaris' Tangier residence. Spanish workmen of the town, on hearing of the outrage, were sent out in a body to rescue the captives, but, of course, this scheme had to be rejected as dangerous."

"When the two gentlemen were carried off both were in evening dress and Mr. Varley had no overcoat."

"Two of Raisuli's men, who brought a letter from the prisoners asking for a change of clothing, were recognized by Mr. Harris, the Times correspondent, as two of his fallers who had been very kind to him when he was in the British power. Mr. Harris assured the family that he never received anything but good treatment at Raisuli's hands."

"One of Perdicaris' servants, Sellanito, insisted on sharing his captivity and is a great comfort."

Fleetwood Varley of Maidenhead has already left for Tangier to assist in the relief of his brother and stepfather.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL. New York, June 4.—After days of awful suffering, death relieved William E. Reynolds, a conductor on the Pennsylvania road, at St. Francis Hospital in Jersey City.

Mr. Reynolds sacrificed his life to save two women who were picking up coal in the railroad yards at Jersey City.

As he was going to take out his train he saw the two women in imminent danger of being run down by an approaching express train and at once sprang to their assistance. He managed to push them from the tracks just as the train thundered upon them, but he had not time to reach safety himself.

He was struck by the pilot and hurled a great distance, suffering injuries which resulted in his death. He was conscious but a small part of the time after being injured.

His skull was fractured at the top of the head and also at the base of the brain, his nose was broken in two places, his tongue bitten nearly in two, and there was a compound fracture of the left arm.

Mr. Reynolds, while maintaining a residence at No. 212 South Ohio avenue, Columbus, O., had for many years been a conductor on the Pennsylvania lines, running the Congressional Limited train between New York and Washington, D. C.

His wife was at the bedside of her husband when death occurred, having come East immediately upon receiving word of the accident.

HISSES FOR SHOW COSSACKS. Commander Offended by Jests Which Greet His Men.

Philadelphia, June 4.—Groans and hisses for Russian Cossacks and cheers for Japanese cavalry have so reflected the war sentiment among patrons of Pawnee Bill's Wild West Show that trouble has resulted within the ranks of that organization.

Prince Lokke, who commands the Cossacks, cannot understand why a Philadelphia audience, which shouted approval last year, now condemns and jeers at him.

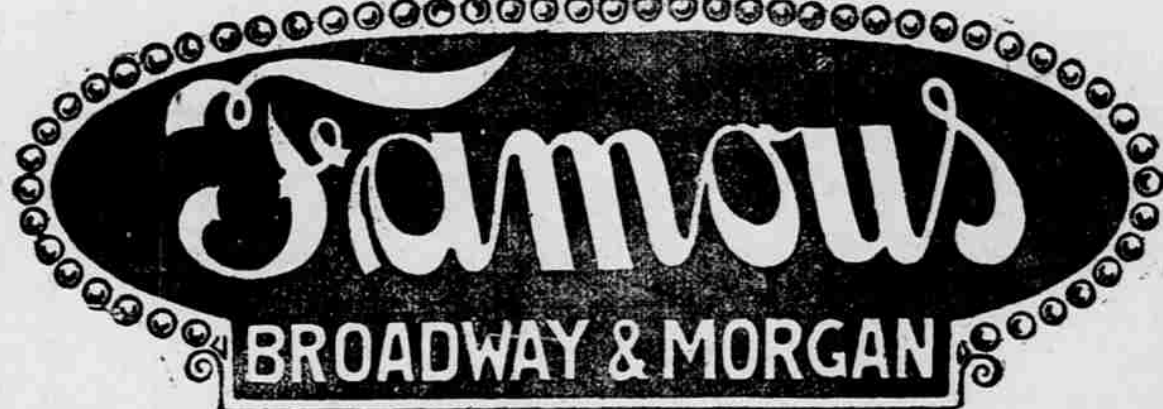

Two Eagle Trading Stamps Instead of the Usual One To-Morrow Morning at Famous Up Till 12 O'Clock Noon
